As every country is fighting against terrorism with more and more military power, Italy, however, goes against the trend and makes its own way to create peace. The Italian government is giving teenagers 500 euros on their 18th birthdays as long as they spend the money only on cultural activities such as buying books, theater tickets, or visiting museums or national parks. This is believed to be very easy for teenagers to spend the money in such a way because Italy is a place well-known for its fine arts and music. Prime Minister Matteo Renzi has made clear the plan after several terror attacks in European cities. He wants to use more than just the military to fight terrorism. He told the reporters, " They imagine terror, we answer with culture." This is just the reason why he is spending 290 million euros to pay for the gift, which he hopes could invite young adults to see Italy in a bright way.
