This summer I studied English at a boys' school in London and lived with an English family, the Whites. At their home, I learned the differences between Taiwanese and English cultures.

At the dinner table, people in the UK always have soup before other food. But in Taiwan we always have it as the last dish. When we are sick, we can go to a doctor at any time. But the English always call their doctor before they go to see them.

Also, the two cultures are different in education. Taiwanese parents usually help their kids with their homework, but English parents want their kids to solve problems by themselves.

However, both Taiwanese and English families are kind to new friends. The Whites helped me a lot during my stay. I really enjoyed the life there.

Question 11 : Why did the boy stay in London with the White family?

Question 12 : When do the English have soup at their dinner?

Question 13 : Which is true about the English?
