Both "Café Terrace at Night" and "The Starry Night" are two famous paintings of the night by Vincent van Gogh. In "Cafe Terrace at Night," there's a bright yellow part with people sitting at a café, but in "The Starry Night," it's mostly dark blue.

You can see a small town with a big, swirling sky that is full of stars in "The Starry Night". The stars are bright and shining, and they seem to move around in the sky. The town in the painting has some buildings, trees, and even a church with a tall steeple.

Van Gogh painted this picture when he was staying in a mental hospital in France. He was feeling sad and lonely at the time, and he wanted to capture his feelings in the painting. He used dark blue, bright yellow, and deep green colors with bright white and yellow for the stars to create a beautiful masterpiece.

Many people love "The Starry Night" because it is so beautiful and makes them feel happy and peaceful. Today, you can see this famous painting at the museum, MoMA, in New York City. These two paintings show different feelings of nighttime, and both are very special works of art.
