Simon learns three kinds of relationships between animals from his science class.

1. The first one: The animals help each other. It is a win-win for them.

Bacteria and cows show (39) a good example. Bacteria live in the stomach of cows. They help the cows break down the food they eat, and the cows (40) a place and food for bacteria. Both of them get good things.

2. The second one: One animal gets good things from the other. To the other animal, there is nothing bad (41) good.

For a bird on a tree branch, the tree gives it a nice and safe home. The bird does nothing to the tree.

3. The third one: One animal gets something good; the other animal gets something bad.

Some bugs live on the dogs. They take dogs' blood as food, (42) it is not good news for dogs. These bugs are bad to their body. With bugs on them, the dogs are not healthy.
